RECEPTION OF THE INDIANS AT BOSTON.

The use of long delegations of Sioux and Four-Sioux and Ioways to Boston, will be a remarkable incident in history. It is a proper, and a delicate consonance, and one that demands the cordial and respectful acknowledgment of the proper authorities of the General Government, that from the moment of their arrival in that city to that of their departure from it, they were the objects of the most kind attention of the city and the State. The Mayor met them on the depot of the railroad, and during the whole time they were in the city, he exerted his personal and official influence to secure them from intrusion that might have been unpleasant to them.—His Excellency Governor Davis, also, rendered every officiable to promote the same objects. To both these gentlemen, the humble, not only of the General Government, but of the country, are due, for the measures they adopted to accomplish the great purpose of the visit of the delegations, which were to give them correct ideas of the power of the United States, and of the numbers and resources of the people; a conviction of the friendly disposition of their white brethren towards them. To the achievement of this object, and this was aimed at, the first appearance among them of so many men from the banks of the Mississippi and Missouri may have been felt of great use. We give place to day to an account, which we find in the Boston Advertiser, of the reception of these Indians, at the State House, and in the Common. This account, we presume, is from the pen of a gentleman well appointed for the purpose.—Globe.

From the Boston Advertiser of October 31.

The ceremony of receiving the Indian Chiefs in the Council Hall of the State House place yesterday in a very interesting manner. It was indeed a most entire population of the city came in motion, and an assemblage almost unexampled, filled the streets and crowded the State House. No public spectacle in the memory of the oldest inhabitant has ever been followed by such an orderly population as the one which gave a host of Sioux, and Iowa Indians a welcome to Boston, and to the progress of the Indians through the United States.

In the morning from ten to twelve, the Chiefs had a levee for the ladies exclusively to Faneuil Hall. It was crowded to excess, and the ladies, who filled our fair witness, who did not behave as well as the men.

At 2 o'clock the Chiefs arrived in the Representatives' Hall, having been escorted by the Lancers. The gallery of the hall were filled with ladies, the seats below by members of the Legislature, etc. receiving the visitors as the men left the hall, it was impossible to have admitted more without preventing the entrance.

THE TALK WITH THE CHIEFS IN THE STATE HOUSE.

After the Chiefs were seated, the Hon. Lewis Governor Davis, from the Speaker's chair, addressed them nearly as follows, and said that our governors were a deputation from the united tribes of Sioux and Iowas, who had visited Washington to see the whole country with the Government, especially of the great treaty of 1830, relating to the boundaries of lands. They were now on their return to their friendship and mutual favors, at the head waters of the river Des Moines, in the Territory of Wisconsin, running down to the north line of Missouri.—The number of the tribes is 6,000, and they number 1,400 brave warriors of bearing arms. Their language bearing no resemblance to those of Maumee, Potawatomies and others that once occupied the place where we are. The other band of Indians are the Ioways and Missouri tribes, who have left their old homes in Missouri, and a deputation of the Yankton tribe of Sioux Indians, who visited the city four half hundreds.—These last left the city to-day, on their return to their hunting grounds.

Our friends who are present of the Mississippi Sioux and Iowas are the Chiefs and warriors of Wabasha, and four chiefs united with him, two of the Sac and two of the Fox tribes. They are the chiefs of villages. Each of these chief warriors are attended with their wives, (few in number,) and there are five children, one of which is a half breed Chippewa, named Mauvinet, the son of the principal Fur Trader, Mauvinet. Their language is extremely limited, and in addressing them through an interpreter, it is necessary to appeal to objects in the senses rather than the understanding. To convey to them an abstract idea requires a tedious process of explanation by comparison with sensible objects.—The audience would thus be aware that an address to them was not their replies; there would be much simplicity; and, if any thing occurred that might excite pleasantry, it was received in a lively way expression, lest it should seem to our guests, whose dignity was eminent characteristic in gravity, to border on the ridiculous. Our guests, we should take as little note as possible, in order that it might be the less embarrassing.

The Governor then proceeded to address the Chiefs in the following manner, which was interpreted to them by sentences, the Chiefs, at each sentence, uttering an emphatic ugh!

"Chiefs and Warriors of the united Sac and Fox tribes, you are welcome to our Hall of Council.—You have come a far way from your homes in the West to visit your white brethren. We are glad to take you by the hand.

"We have heard before of the Sacs and Foxes—our travellers have told us the names of their great and men and chiefs: we are glad to see them with our own eyes. [A very emphatic ugh! The savage as well as the sage, is pleased with a little neat flattery.]

"We are called the Massachusetts. It is the name of the red men that once lived here. In former times, the red men's wigwams stood on these fields, and his council fires were kindled on this spot.

"When our fathers came over the great water, they were a small band. The red men stood on the rock by the sea side, and looked at them. He might have pushed them into the water and drowned them; but he took hold of their hands and said, Welcome, white men! Our fathers were hungry, and the red men gave them corn and venison. Our fathers were cold, and the red men spared his blanket over their shoulders.

"We are now grown great and powerful, but we have not forgotten the kindness of the red men to us.

"Brothers! our faces are pale and yours red, but our hearts are white. The Great Spirit has made us the children of different complexions, but he loves them all.

"Brothers! you dwell between the Mississippi and the Missouri—they are mighty streams. They have great arms—one stretches out to the sun and the other away west to the Rocky Mountains. But they make one river, and they run together into the sea.

"Brothers! we dwell in the East and you live in the far West, but we are one family—of many branches, but one head.

"Brothers! as you passed through the Hall below, you stopped to look at the image of our great father, Washington. He is a cold stone, and can not speak to you. But our great father, Washington, loved his children, and took them in his arms. He is dead, but his words have made a great peace in our land, like the Missouri and Mississippi, that run to the prairies.

"My Brother, (addressing Keokuck) I perceive by your side your young child sitting in the council with you. May he grow up by your side like the tender sapling by the side of the mighty tree. May you live long enough to see him grow a mighty oak in fallen in the forest, may the young tree be in its place, and strong and straight as the oak.

"Brothers! I make you a short talk, and bid you welcome once more to our council hall."

KEOKUCK, the principal Chief, and first talking friends with the Governor and others next to him, responded with correct emphasis, and much graceful gesticulation, holding his right hand which he frequently shifted from hand to hand—a very graceful and appropriate gesture. He spoke deeply interesting, and the expansion of his head and countenance, into the upper part of the forehead is very. The interpreter, as far as we could understand him, was correct. The Chief's speech was concise and interest is undoubtedly lost to us by an imperfect report.

"I Keokuck and the Chiefs are very much gratified that they have had the pleasure of shaking hands with the head man or Governor of this country, and also with all the men that surround him.

"The Great Spirit has made the White Spirit to reside both of us, though over white and red men. He has made you white and us red. The only difference I feel is, he made you speak one language, and us another. He made the same heart, (or sky) above our hands for both. He gave us hunting grounds, each other by, and we are content with what he has allotted us. He gave us our forefathers, and we love them all.

"Brothers! we have come a long journey to see the white men in their own country. We have seen

"FROM ITS NATURE, THE EXISTENCE OF A BANK MUST BE ALLIED TO THE ASCENDANCY OF WEALTH, AND NOT TO THE DEMOCRACY OF NUMBERS; AND THUS IS MORE ESPECIALLY THE CASE WITH GREAT CHARTERED BANKS HAVING IMMENSE POWER. THE LATE BANK OF THE UNITED STATES WAS THE TYPE OF THIS DESCRIPTION, AND ITS POLITICAL INFLUENCE WAS PRODIGIOUS."

[G]reat length of the bill for the sale of the public lands, passed without a single division, the usual quantity of talking was dispensed with, and the deficiency will be made up in some future time when we have something of more interest from the local details of news, on our nine sides.

[O]ur readers will know that we are not in the habit of forcing, and we are not obtaining patronage for such of the predilections, or, as it would be extremely glad if some of our patrons agreeing in them or have brilliant colouring, inducing, and pen cook of ice and their press parties awarding, and we are glad that this is a season of the year when money is generally more plentiful. Their common liability, we are generally used, which is the opportunity they are of considerable importance to us, and we hope they will not, in short on exception, so consider it. "As a tool in the hand" &c.

[O]ur Congressional Nomination.—Just as our paper was ready for press, we received the nomination of the Peoria Convention, of a candidate to represent this district in the 25th Congress, and in a hasty time in my that it meets with much general approbation, and have no doubt it will be unanimously by the Democratic party generally. The vote stands as follows: A. Jonnson, 27; Jas. Stephenson, 7; James Turney, 8; and more according.

PROSPECTUS OF THE UNITED STATES MAGAZINE AND DEMOCRATIC REVIEW.

ON the first of October, 1837, will be published at Washington, District of Columbia, and delivered simultaneously in the principal cities of the United States, a new Monthly Magazine, under the above title, devoted to the principles of the Democratic party.

It is being here apparent to many of the reflecting members of the Democratic party of the United States, that a periodical for the diffusion and defence of their political principles, and for the support of their political character, similar to England, is a desideratum, which if it was very important to secure for the permanent success of the party the attractions of a national and spacious literature, a political standard work, combining collected support to the doctrines and measures of that party, now sanctioned by a large majority of the people. Discussing the great questions of the day before them, explaining, defending and advocating the Democratic doctrine through the most able writers that that party can furnish, in matters of greater length, more condensed form, more elaborate research, than can be done in the daily press, and for the new paper press, a Magazine of this character becomes an instrument of great importance to secure for the enlightenment and formation of public opinion, and for the support of the principles it avows and defends. By these means, by then explaining and defending the measures of the great Democratic party, which it always has been the pride and boast of the Democratic press to support from those assaults of the opposition, and party which so frequently distract the country, and upon which, imperfectly acquainted as they often are by friends, and misrepresented and distorted as they never fail to be by political opponents, it is not the utmost importance that the public should be fully and impartially informed. It is believed that the medium in question may be made to exert a beneficial influence, and long influence on the public mind.

Other considerations, which cannot be too highly appreciated, will render the establishment and success of the proposed Magazine of very great importance.

In the mighty struggle of antagonist principles which is now going on in society, the Democratic party of the United States stands committed to the world as the depositary and champion of those rights and doctrines of political faith with which the mass of the people in every age and country is identified. Chiefly from the want of a convenient means of concentrating its intellectual energies, the Democratic party has hitherto been almost wholly unrepresented in the republic of letters, whilst the able and prolific opinion opposing creeds are daily advocated by the ablest and most accomplished writers of the age and learning.

In the United States Magazine the attempt will be made to remedy this reproach.

The moment is the time peculiarly appropriate for the commencement of such an undertaking. The Democratic body of the Union, after a struggle which tested to the utmost its stability and its principles, have succeeded in attaining, and now hold the executive administration of the country. In the consequent complete repose from political excitement, the period is auspicious for organizing and calling to its aid a new and powerful ally of public opinion, conferring with none and co-operating with all.

Co-ordinate with this main design of the United States Magazine, no one nor east will be spared to render it a literary point of honor to the country, and fit to take its place of resort with its European competitors. Writers, in the high language on the noble heritage and common birthright of all who speak the tongue of Milton and Shakspeare, it will be the uniform object of its conductors to present only the finest productions in the various branches of literature, that can be procured; and to dilate the breath of ancient models of thought and composition.

In this department the exclusiveness of party, which is impossible from the political department of such a work, will have no place. Here will be found the most general ground of equality and reciprocity, where alike subscribers and writers will be found on a level, and alike obliged to also be recognized as the common law. Our political creed, our political principles, and our measures, in this literature it will be our common pride to cherish and extend, as the best inheritance of the whole people of the United States.

As the United States Magazine is founded on the broadest basis which the nature and relevance of the Constitution grant in the United States, it proposes, if attended to render it in every respect a thoroughly National work, not merely of a party and geographical interest and attraction, but to continue of permanent literary value. With this view a considerable portion of its contents will be appropriated to the following work, in addition to the articles of original reference and interest.

A general summary of Political and of Domestic Intelligence, digested in the order of the States, comprising all the valuable information of the month, ending near the day of publication.

General Literary Intelligence, Domestic and Foreign.

General Scientific Intelligence, including Agricultural improvements, notices of new Patents, &c.

A condensed account of all new works of merit. Improvements throughout the series, preceded by a general view of all now in operation or in progress.

Military and Naval News, Promotions, Changes, Movements, &c.

Foreign Intelligence.

Biographical obituary notices of distinguished persons.

After the close of each session of Congress, an extra of 96 or 128 pages, will be issued, containing a general review and history of its proceedings, embodying all of importance on all documents, and the acts of the session.

Advantages will also be taken of the recent enactments in the establishment of Post Offices and Post Routes, to collect and arrange such extensive statistical observations on all the most important subjects of the country as cannot fail to prove of very great value.

This portion of the work will be separately paged so as to admit of binding by itself, and will be issued at the end of each session, so that the United States Magazine will also constitute a work of the Annual Register, or a work similar adopted before, and of very great importance to all offices; not only as embodying a current and complete view, from month to month, of the subjects which it will embrace, but also for record and reference through future years, the value of which will increase with the progress of the work.

Although in its political character for the United States Magazine to assume its claims to support peculiarly to the Democratic party, it is hoped that its literary features will at the same time commend it to the favorable object of becoming acquainted with the existence of a work which will constantly recommend it to a liberal and candid support from every class of the community.

To promote the popular objects in view, and relying upon the united support of the Democratic party as well as from others, the price of subscription is fixed at the rate of five dollars per annum, which, in mechanical arrangements, and in size, and in matter, the author, the United States Magazine will be placed on a par at least with the leading monthlies of England. The whole will form three large octavo volumes each year.

The subscription will be in all cases payable in advance, or (for the first year only) six dollars on the delivery of the third number. The absolute necessity of this rule in such an establishment will be obvious to all.

In return for a remittance of $50, eleven copies will be sent; for $100, twenty three copies. The certificate of a postmaster of the remittance of a sum of money will be a sufficient receipt, all danger of the mail being at the risk of the publishers.

All communications will be addressed, post paid, to the undersigned, the publishers.

PROSPECTUS FOR THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE AND APPENDIX.

THE CIRCULE of the deep interest which must be felt throughout the United States in the proceedings of a new Congress, assembled by the new administration, to meet the extraordinary emergencies which have arisen in the affairs of the country, the undersigned have thereby made preparations to issue a full report of the debates in the Senate and House of Representatives, which will be published with the greatest possible expedition. The publication will be commenced with the first day of the session, and will be continued without intermission throughout the session, at the rate of 128 pages per week, or 512 pages per month, making, at the end of the session, two octavo volumes of 1,000 pages each, or thereabouts.

The Congressional Globe will be sent to those papers that will publish the prospectus and publish it to the end of the session, and send a copy of the paper containing it to the office of publication, and receive in exchange for it the Congressional Globe
